

Class #12 Audio Script

Use “going to” to express plans or intentions

Podcast episode on business travel

Hello listeners! This is James, your local traveler and today, I want to share with you my plans on a business trip in an incredible city called Chicago. You know, when I first arrived, I thought it would be all work and no games, but it turns out I have some time to get to know this place.

So, here's the plan: I'm going to explore the city in my free time. Tomorrow, I'm going to visit the local museum. I am going to take many pictures. I will ask for a tour guide to accompany me, if I have any questions about the exhibits.

On Saturday, I'm going to take a walk around the city center. There are some famous places I'm really looking forward to seeing. I will visit the old cathedral because I told my mom I'd buy her a candle and light it there as a special gesture. I am going to the historic market; I am going to the historic market; I really want to buy some unique souvenirs for my friends and family back home.

I am going back on Sunday, so I'm going to take a day trip to the nearby countryside since according to the weather forecast, it isn't going to be sunny; therefore I am going to take a cap, but either way, I think I will also take an umbrella just in case.

I can't wait to experience all the culture and beauty this city has to offer. This trip has turned into a great opportunity to get to know the place beyond just business.